Chapter 1 - Judge McDermott

Judge Wendell McDermott was an evil man. He ruled Winston County Indiana with an iron fist. He had two partners in crime, no pun intended. His two partners were the district attorney, Dabney Hayes, and the Sheriff, Duke McElhaney. People referred to them as the “UnHoly Trinity.” Black men would avoid driving through Winston County because they were known to be racial profilers. Most police cruisers said “To Serve and Protect” on the side of the car. To be honest, Winston Police Cars should have said “To Control and Enslave.”

For example, if a drug bust was executed, only half of the money and cocaine would make it back to the evidence room. The UnHoly Trinity had an old red barn on an abandoned farm 4 miles east of Winston. On the outside, it looked like an average barn. However, on the inside, there were computers, gun safes and an elaborate set of tunnels for human trafficking.

The three of them enjoyed lifetime employment because their re-elections were guaranteed. The guarantee came via funding from a global cult known as the Lords of Brimstone. To control the world, they had to control local hick-towns like Winston. By controlling the three highest law enforcement officers in 5,500 counties in the U.S., they essentially had control over all elections.

The Lords of Brimstone helped 20 million illegal aliens to invade the U.S. and vote. They could bring in their corporations and get enormous tax breaks. They could purchase land for pennies on the dollar. This is how the small farming community of Winston, Indiana was home to the global headquarters of Sethritch Pharmaceuticals, one of the largest Pharmaceutical Companies in the world.

Sethritch overlooked Lake Ashtoreth, a luxurious gated community in Winston. The mansions on Lake Ashtoreth started at $3 million each and were owned by Sethritch executives. The townies of Winston were not welcome, unless there was plumbing or electrical work to be done.

Beneath Lake Ashtoreth were hundreds of miles of tunnels. The Lords of Brimstone used them for drug and human trafficking. The humans were used for sex slavery, transhuman research and organ donation. The main victims were kids in the foster care system.

Kids were removed from the home and bounced from family to family. After a while, the kids just disappeared and were transported around the world to Bolivia, Bangkok and Hollywood. Many times, the kids were sacrificed in satanic rituals to collect the adrenochrome in their bloodstreams. Members of the Lords of Brimstone, celebrities, and CEOs believed that drinking the adrenochrome of children would bring them eternal life and appease the demon known as Molech.

Bottom line, to drive through Winston, Indiana looked like just another hick town. But God saw the hidden truth and was about to unleash his Judgment on the Untouchable UnHoly Trinity.

Chapter 2 - Steve Dinkmeyer

Steve Dinkmeyer was a standup guy. He was an 18-year-old senior at Winston High School. Steve and his dad, Larry, rented a trailer on 300 East, three miles from downtown Winston. A couple of years ago, Steve's mom left them for a real estate agent she met on Facebook. The divorce broke Larry's heart and destroyed his self-esteem, but he had to keep it together to put food on the table for him and his son.

Larry was an excellent plumber, and he loved his job. It was a physically demanding job. Because he was an independent contractor, he could not afford health insurance. To reduce their risk, Steve played it safe by not participating in high school sports and risk getting injured. Larry felt guilty. Larry's lack of money was preventing his son from enjoying life. Fortunately, Steve didn't see it that way.

Steve and Larry were both Christians, but Steve's faith was stronger than his dad's. Steve reminded his dad that their blessings outweighed their problems. They could see, walk and their kidneys worked. They didn't have cancer. They had a place to live, and they had transportation. They had more than a lot of people. This made Larry feel better for a while, but then Larry would let the demons back into his mind who told him he was worthless.

Steve was an awesome young man. He took Jenny Wadsworth to the prom his junior and senior year. Jenny had Down's Syndrome and ate by herself in the cafeteria. The jocks would throw food at her until she walked out in the hall and cried. Steve sat by her and tried to protect her as much as he could, but it was an uphill battle.

Steve was a brilliant kid with a 3.7 grade point average. He wanted to go to Ball State and be a statistician. However, he had to let go of that dream. It was all Larry could do to put food on the table. College was out of the question. Upon graduation, Steve told his dad that he would be his plumbing apprentice and take over the business when Larry retired.

Chapter 3 - Fred and Betty Chalmers

Fred Chalmers was a Vietnam veteran and took care of his wife Betty, who had dementia. Betty once had a brilliant mind. She taught physics at Winston High School for 43 years. Tragically, dementia had taken its toll on Betty's mind. They had three kids and six grandkids. Two of the kids lived nearby and would help take care of Betty to give Fred a break. The third child lived in Oregon. They rarely saw him, but he had lots of money. Hence, he would send money to help his parents.

Fred and Betty lived in a small Cape Cod near the center of Winston. This situation worked out well, because Fred and Betty could walk to church, the grocery and other places.

Betty's dementia was getting progressively worse, and Larry's glaucoma limited his ability to take care of her. Everyone saw the handwriting on the wall. Betty needed to live in a memory care unit.

Unfortunately, they couldn't afford it. Their daughter moved in to help take care of Betty.

Betty was not allowed to cook because she started a fire in the oven. It was a manageable situation for now, but in the next year, different living arrangements would have to be made.

What started out as a fairytale marriage 52 years ago now became an ongoing struggle just to survive. Betty had many doctor appointments. She would often ask the same question three times in 15 minutes. Fred loved his beautiful bride, but it became irritating and unbearable.

God had provided for them so far in life. They successfully raised three kids, but the only relief Fred saw was the death of Betty.

Chapter 4 - A New Rideshare Service for Winston, Indiana

Most of the popular rideshare services like Uber were exclusive to the bigger cities with a population of 80,000 or more. People who lived in rural communities like Winston, Indiana did not have that luxury. It was simply not profitable. Thankfully, one man of God decided to change all of that.

Alvin O'Donnell decided to offer a rideshare service for the people of Winston. It wasn't fancy and there was no app. People would simply call his 800 number and tell him where they needed to go. Alvin operated on love gifts only. If you needed to go somewhere and didn't have any money, that was no problem. Alvin was a good man and just wanted to help.

Alvin's taxi was anything but typical. He drove a 68 Chevelle Nomad station wagon with a 383 four-barrel, dual exhaust and
