Chapter 1 – Juanita Hernandez Retires

Juanita Hernandez was an Indiana Legend. She was the first Hispanic female to be a detective for the Indiana State Troopers. She was also a leader in the LGBTQ community. When she was a rookie, she shot Ashley Torrence in self-defense. Ashley was the gay lover of Indiana U.S. Senate Candidate, Agnes Woodstone. When Juanita bent down to check Ashley's pulse, she felt Ashley's spirit enter her body. It was at that point Juanita realized she was a lesbian. Over the course of her 38-year career, she had many sexual encounters with hundreds of lovers. The spirit of "Ashley" entered the body of each of her lovers. Consequently, "Ashley's" spirit entered their lovers, and so on, and so on, and so on.

Juanita was a frequent speaker at Gay Rights Rallies and spoke before Congress about Gay marriage on two occasions. When she spoke in public, she described the encounter with Ashley Torrence.

“When Ashley’s spirit transferred from her dying body into mine, it was as if Ashley was handing me the baton. Ashley sent me a spiritual mission to keep fighting for the rights of the LGBTQ community so we can come out of the closet.”

Juanita was half-right. A spirit did transfer from Ashley to Juanita, but it was not Ashley’s spirit...it was the spirit of Ashtoreth.

Ashtoreth was the ancient Babylonian queen of sexual desire and promiscuity. In a period of 4 decades, the spirit of Ashtoreth spread like wildfire throughout the earth into the bodies and minds of one billion souls. People had no problem with sex outside of marriage of a man and woman. Ashtoreth’s spirit was in one/eighth of the earth’s population. This angered God.

Juanita was a famous Ball State Alumni and got pictures with other famous Ball State alums and athletes, including the current #1 college basketball player in the country, Franz Polchek.

At one time, Juanita could have been a swimsuit model. However, like everyone else, wrinkles, arthritis, etc had taken its toll on Juanita's body. She had not had a lover in eight years. She was no longer able to keep up her duties as a detective for the Indiana State Police. It was time for her to retire.

Chapter 2 – Could Franz Polcheck lead Ball State to Two Undefeated Seasons?

While one Indiana Legend was at the end of her career, a new legend had stepped onto the stage. Franz Polcheck was the power forward for the Ball State Cardinals men's basketball team. He was the number one player in the country. He won the James Naismith Award his freshman year and led Ball State to an undefeated National Championship. This was the first time since the 75-76 Indiana University Basketball team went undefeated.

Ball State was 11-0 during Franz's sophomore season. Las Vegas odds-makers gave Ball State a 28% chance to go undefeated two years in a row. Meanwhile, Franz had struck up a friendship/business partnership with Wilhelm Schnell. They formalized their professional relationship when Wilhelm became his agent. Wilhelm encouraged Franz to become eligible for the NBA Draft after his sophomore season. There was no sense risking injury in college when you could make $100 million in the NBA.

By the time March Madness came around, Ball State was still undefeated and had a number one seed in the Midwest. Las Vegas increased their odds of having a second undefeated season from 28% to 72%. Ball State waltzed to the NCAA Championship game versus Creighton. Creighton was the Cinderella story of the season, but everyone expected Ball State to cream them. Ball State was favored to win the NCAA Championship by 28 points.

Wilhelm spoke with Franz the night before the game.

“Mr. Schnell, I never could have made it without you. Thank you for the Adidas contract, the car, the apartment. We never had anything like this in Germany!”

“You are very welcome, Franz. You’ve earned it. When you enter the NBA Draft after tomorrow night, you will never have to worry about money again,” said Wilhelm.

“Do you think I can get $100 million,” asked Franz.

“Pfft,” replied Wilhelm. “The Pacers are willing to pick you #1 in the draft. You will be a multi-billionaire before you are 30. But, with everything, there is a price. To make it huge in the NBA, you need to do me a small favor tomorrow night.”

“Umm, what kind of favor?” asked Franz.

“With ten minutes to go in the game, I need you to fake a hamstring injury and be taken out of the game,” replied Wilhelm.

“Are you nuts, Mr. Schnell?” replied Franz. “I am within 24 hours of being on the only team to have back-to-back undefeated seasons! I can have fame and fortune. Why should I settle for just fortune?”

Wilhelm sighed, “The Lords of Brimstone is betting $200 billion on Creighton to win. Ball State is a 5:1 favorite to win the Championship. If Creighton wins, the Lords of Brimstone will win one trillion dollars. If you do me this favor, you can have $100 million by midnight tomorrow night. You could buy 50 Lamborghini’s by Tuesday afternoon. You just want back-to-back championships because of pride. However, pride goeth before a fall. Besides, what if you turn me down and really get injured? You would blow $100 million dollars and kiss the Pacers contract goodbye. Do the math.”

Franz sighed, “Well, this is a change of plans. But you are right, injuries happen all the time and pride goes before a fall.”

Wilhelm patted Franz on the back. “Now you are thinking like a businessman.”
